Motor Show: BEV bookings up

Total bookings of 4-wheeled vehicles at the 2024 Motor Expo grew 25% from last year, propelled by an increase in BEV bookings, gaining to 33% of total bookings. Fueling the rise was more affordable prices made possible by government BEV incentives and more choices. However, we Underweight the automotive sector on concerns over the economy and tighter domestic auto loans that may derail local auto demand. We like AH, whose valuation is attractive and has made a clearer move to EVs.

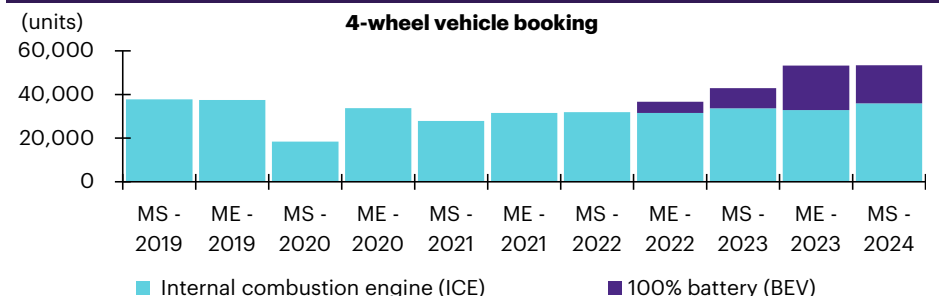

BEV bookings up. Thailand held its annual Bangkok International Motor Show from March 27 to April 7, where 53,438 4-wheel vehicles were booked, a 25% increase from last year. By vehicle type, 35,921 of the bookings were for internal combustion engine (ICE) vehicles (67% of total bookings, up 7% from last year), with 17,517 bookings for 100% battery electric vehicles (BEVs) (33% of total bookings, surging 90% from last year). The gain in BEVs is likely fueled by more affordable prices made possible by government incentives and more choices, largely from Chinese brands. Event highlights included the introduction of BEV models from new Chinese brands coming to Thailand; Zeekr and XPENG, and the unveiling of Isuzu’s first BEV one-ton pickup, which it plans to produce in Thailand and export to select European markets such as Norway in 2025.

BEVs to start production in Thailand in 2024, but contribution will be small. Under the 3.0 BEV stimulus program, automakers that import BEVs to sell are obligated to produce BEVs in Thailand for domestic sale and for export. In line with this, in 2024, China automakers BYD and NETA plan to start BEV production. Initially, this will be small as BEVs imported by BYD and NETA in 2022-2023 and registered came to ~43K or ~2% of our 2024F auto production.

Underweight sector. We take a cautious view on Thai auto production and forecast small 3% growth to 1.9mn vehicles in 2024, concerned about economic uncertainty and tighter auto loans amid high household debt that may derail local auto demand. We forecast an unexciting 5% core automotive sector earnings growth in 2024. Sector catalysts would be a better economic picture and more readily available auto loans, expected in 2H24 when interest rates are expected to start to come down. We like AH, whose valuation is attractive at 4.6x 2024PE, below SAT’s 7.1x and STANLY’s 8.7x, and we forecast 8% dividend yield on 2024 operations. AH has made a clearer move to EVs than direct peers SAT and STANLY, whose exposure is very small. AH provides metal forming parts and plastic injection and casting parts for EV models at 4% of 2023 sales and it expects greater sales of EV parts in 2024.

Risks. 1) Concerns on economic uncertainty, increasing cost of living and rising interest rates that may derail auto demand, 2) semiconductor shortages that disrupt auto supply chains and 3) the level of adaptation to the move from the ICE vehicle by incumbent auto parts suppliers. We see the key ESG risk as environmental issues (E).

February auto statistics

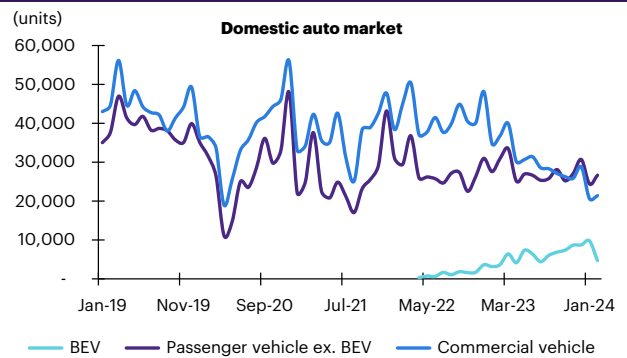

- In February, Thailand produced 133,690 vehicles, falling 19% YoY but up 6% MoM
- Behind the YoY drop was a weak domestic auto market at 52,843 units (-26% YoY, -4% MoM), primarily a weak commercial vehicle market at 21,400 units (-42% YoY, +4% MoM), which has been slipping YoY for 14 months as high household debt leads financial institutions to tighten the extension of auto loans. Passenger vehicles excluding BEVs comprised 26,712 units (-14% YoY, +9% MoM), with 4,731 BEVs (+29% YoY, -52% MoM on January’s high before the EV 3.0 program ended).
- 88,720 vehicles were exported (flat YoY, +2% MoM).
